

Before vision therapy my left eye had a habit of drifting out when I was tired. This annoyed me how people pointed it out. Homework took a while, and math was the most challenging for me.

When I went to my eye doctor, he realized that my eye drifted out more. I used to do this old "eye exercises" which was extremely boring. You looked at a pencil and just moved it back and forth for 5 minutes. After a while, I kind of forgot about it. So the next time we went to the eye doctor, he said that the drifting was happening more. So, he sent me to eye therapy. I was worried that I would get surgery.

When I first arrived at eye therapy, I was nervous that it would be all boring like the "eye exercises". But I was wrong. We first did all these cool computer games, played a lot of board games, and it was really fun. I looked forward to it every week, because I got to skip a hour of school, and that it was fun. Even though the HTS base-out and jump-uctions are boring, I still got to play a lot of fun games, like Jetpack Joyride, Temple run, etc. My favorite game was Space is Key.

Now math and homework is a lot easier. I can now notice when my eye is drifting out, so I can bring it back in. Eye therapy has also let me have a lot more control of my eyes. If you are new here, don't worry, it is really fun.
